Subject: Obama's NLRB Declares War on Job Creators

Dear Subscriber,

President Obama's National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) filed a complaint recently over Boeing's plans to open a second plant in South Carolina, a "right-to-work" state, instead of expanding its operations in Puget Sound, Washington, where its workers are unionized. The new South Carolina facility is for the production of the company's 787 Dreamliner plane.

TAKE ACTION. Tell your legislator to reject the NLRB bailout!

Boeing's Washington workers belong to the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers (IAM). The IAM went on strike four times since 1989, costing Boeing at least $1.8 billion in revenue. The new plant in South Carolina would be non-union.

The NLRB is declaring war on job creators and killing jobs!

Why in the world would an agency that's charged with addressing disputes between employers and employees in the private sector concern itself with a company building a supplemental facility anywhere in the country? Because, the NLRB believes Boeing acted out "anti-union animus" in building the facility and creating jobs in a right-to-work state.

The government agency decided nearly two years after the fact that Boeing's actions were retaliation for the IAM's repeated shut downs of commercial aircraft production, including a strike lasting almost 60 days costing billions.

You can help.

Tell your legislators that Federal bureaucrats shouldn't be telling private companies how to run their businesses. It's time to take a stand for American businesses and workers.

Sincerely,

Katie Gage
